Examples of cyber insurance claims

1 Ransomware attack

An online embroidery company in the UK suffered a ransomware attack. The attacker created two user accounts and attempted to encrypt and remove customer details and information regarding orders, stock and accounts. The attacker also left a ransom note instructing the company to contact a specified email address.

2 Encryption of files

An insurance intermediary's computers were infected with CryptoWall malware that had encrypted certain files stored on the computer and the company's internal network drive. The names of the files had been altered to "help_your_files.png" and a ransom was demanded to regain access to the files.

3 Unhappy Employee

A recruitment company was faced with a data leak when a disgruntled employee did not have access rights removed during the leaving process. They were able to access sensitive personnel information, which was then posted on a social media site

4 Business interruption

A hotel chain that allows customers to book online suffered an operational error when a data centre switchover did not complete fully. Their online booking system was down for over 8 hours resulting in immediate lost revenue

5 Distributed denial of service (DDoS)

An online retailer's website was the subject of a DDoS attack, which resulted in their website being inaccessible or experiencing reduced performance. Prior to the attack the company received an online message claiming that their website protection was extremely low and would be taken offline unless a payment of £3,000 was made. Further ransom demands of £500 were made during the attack.

6 Embedded virus

A very small independent drinks seller / bottler found a virus in one of their systems involved in the bottling process, which meant not enough bottle lids were produced for the batch of bottles. This resulted in waste and consequently the Insured suffered a Loss of Revenue through lost sales.
