Despite increased regulation and more stringent internal controls, theft, fraud and dishonesty are still major threats to business. In uncertain economic times, as crime increases, businesses should take extra care to protect their company's assets by arranging crime insurance. Here are 7 key reasons why:

1 Economic crime is rising

Economies around the world are facing global economic crisis and when economies are depressed, fraud rises. The PWC Crime Survey 2018 highlights some unmistakeable trends: 49% of UK organisations had experienced economic crime in 2018, with both large and small companies being targeted.

2 Brand reputation can be damaging

Damage to reputation, brand, relationships with businesses and regulators are not uncommon results of crime. Prevention is better than cure and a robust system of internal controls is key to minimising risk.

3 The threat is closer than you think

The PWC survey results also show that nearly 1/3 of all economic crimes reported in the last two years were committed by staff, with many involving collusion between outsiders and employees. Accounting and HR Fraud have risen in the last two years, with staff increasingly falsifying expenses and commission payments . While middle management still remain the most likely fraudsters, there is a definite shift towards fraud by more senior and more experienced employees with those committed by senior management nearly tripling from 18% in 2016 to 50% in 2018.

4 Question of when, not if

The risks businesses are facing are not just increasing but becoming more complex, and as the authorities struggle to keep pace, the regulatory burden is growing too. Plus, the threat is diversifying; whilst nearly 1/3 of economic crimes are carried out by employees, businesses are also being targeted by; agents, customers, vendors, hackers, organised criminal gangs and unknown third parties. An increasing number of incidents involve technology, with a big rise in cybercrime in the last two years.

5 New and emerging threats

It is a real test for businesses to minimise economic crime by considering new and emerging threats, and developing new ways to prevent, detect and respond successfully to those threats. The fraud landscape is constantly growing, meaning a fraudster only needs one success, whilst the business needs to continuously work to prevent such frauds from occurring.

6 What is the difference?
Crime and cyber insurance are often mistaken. Crime cover is there to protect financial assets, whereas a cyber policy is there to cover your data risk and associated obligations.

7 Peace of mind
Should the worst happen and you are a victim of financial crime, a comprehensive crime policy can provide essential balance sheet protection. A crime policy could be the difference between making a profit or making a loss. Can you risk not buying crime insurance?
